COURSE LEARNING OUTCOMES

On completion of the course, students should have acquired:

- (a) Insights into conceptual issues attendant to identity formation in Europe's neighbourhood;
- (b) Knowledge concerning European legal regimes within particular focus on case law from the European Court of Human Rights;
- (c) A perspective on the rise of populism and the extent to which particular narratives on identity and security have underpinned the rise of 'othering' in Europe. A look at how (and whether) legal protections at the regional and international level are addressing these state techniques.
- (d) An understanding of the complexities of the MENA region and how the minority question has been narrated.

RECOMMENDED PREPARATION

No particular requirements for this course, however, a useful online resource for issues related to the MENA region can be found at: <http://www.jadaliyya.com> and www.merip.org (this last one requires a subscription but some of its contents are free).

TEACHING METHOD(S)

Lectures, seminars, simulated debates and group discussions

ASSESSMENT METHOD AND CRITERIA

The course will be assessed through three specific means:

- (a) Class participation mark (20 per cent): A class participation mark will be kept for each component of the course (Part I and Part II), the average of which will account for 20 percent of the mark. Marks will be given for participation in the formal and informal elements of the sessions;
- (b) Essay (30 per cent): Students will be required to submit an essay of between 2000 and 2500 words (including footnotes, excluding bibliography) against a set of pre-agreed available topics;
- (c) Take-home examination (50 per cent): Students will have a maximum of 24 hours from the time that the questions are released, to answer a fixed examination question (one of three examination questions).

Retake examinations, i.e. exams passed in the second examination session, will have the same format as those taken during the first exam session. The only exception concerns oral exams, which are replaced in the second exam session by written exams. When a student takes an examination during the second session, the final mark for the course is based solely on the result of the retake examination. No other element of evaluation which would have been taken into consideration in the calculation of the final mark during the first examination session will be considered in the second session.

COURSE CONTENTS

The course will be divided into three parts. Part 1 of the course, delivered through three mini-seminars, will seek to outline the rationale for minority rights, its core substance, how it relates to other lenses such as nationalism and state-building, and how it is manifest in international legal regimes. Part 2, delivered through three mini-seminars, will seek to examine the extent to which the conceptual framework and its core content has resonance to understanding the challenges in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Moldova and Ukraine. Part 3, consisting of four mini-seminars, will be exclusively focused on the MENA region, interrogating the formation of identities through a historical lens, and casting light on the extent to which the term “minorities” has any salience in the region. The seminars will pay close attention to the extent to which communities far from sites of power have been able to inform the direction of public policy.

COURSE MATERIALS (readings and other learning resources/tools)

Students will be given a detailed course outline with specific reading materials identified for each session. It is expected that the reading will be undertaken by the students in advance of the sessions. On occasion the materials will include primary documents (treaties, historic documents, specific legislations, cases), secondary sources derived from the academic literature, and on occasion podcasts and materials from MOOCs.
